A recruiting team from the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) will visit Florida State University for three days next week interviewing students and prospective employees and agents.

The CIA presently has recruiting teams visiting about 100 college campuses across the nation. In addition to FSU, at least two other Florida colleges will be visited by the recruiting teams.

Heading the CIA recruiting team here will be John Bigelow. He will meet with students in the University Union

Wednesday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. University officials said they have been waiting to take the students' appointments.

They added that only senior and graduate students have been allowed to sign up for an interview with Bigelow. This is Bigelow's third trip to the campus in recent years for the purpose of interviewing prospective employees of the agency. Stanley J. Grogan, assistant CIA director, said "every time we have interviews, we have already had students of those who have their appointments."

He said the CIA is particularly interested in students, especially graduate students, and those with scientific training.

Grogan said that "at present, the CIA is particularly interested in students, especially graduate students, and those with scientific training."

He explained that "it is made clear to the students interviewed that it takes some time to get security clearances. They also have to have met their draft requirements."

academic standing. We are particularly interested in those with advanced degrees."

The CIA interview visit to the FSU campus has been announced for several weeks along with a list of requirements which Grogan calls "very strict."

"They're not excused from the draft in order to work for CIA."

Grogan also discouraged those who want to work with the agency only to be involved in James Bond-type pursuits because "the bulk of our employees are engaged in analysis."

"Their task is to keep up with everything that is happening in a particular country or group of countries and try to figure out what it means for the present and the future."
